

Communication Tips for Clubs

Attention. Make sure you have the person's attention before you start speaking. Use their name and make eye contact.

Questions. Keep your questions simple and your answers easy to understand.

Body Language. Body language is important because people with an intellectual disability often rely on visual cues.

Visual Aids. Be prepared with visual aids such as photos, cue cards, or a communication board.

Clear Communication. Be specific and direct. Avoid talking using abstracts, acronyms, metaphors or puns.

Build Trust. Be consistent and respectful. Keep chats private to build trust.
